Wallace Country

Clan Wallace has its traditional home in southwest Scotland, largely in Ayrshire and ranging north and east into Renfrewshire and Lanarkshire. Richard Wallace's first grants near Ayr were located around Riccarton (Richard's Town). Cadet branches emerged as the family's estates increased. Today, the castles and manor houses are in ruins and its considerable holdings and estates have long since passed from family hands. At the end of the 18th century, the chiefly line passed from the Wallaces of Craigie to the Wallaces of Cairnhill. In 1888, Captain Hugh Robert Wallace of Busbie and Cloncaird established himself as Chief of the Clan and Name, and the chiefly line has since remained in that family. The current and 36th Chief of Clan Wallace, Andrew Robert Wallace of that Ilk, resides in Edinburgh, Scotland with his wife. He has a brother James, and a sister Henrietta.

The Wallace Tartan

The Wallace Tartan is one of the most widely seen setts (patterns) today, easily ranking among the top five in popularity and usage. Based on the red and black checkered Rob Roy Tartan, it originated in the early 1820s when Wilson's of Bannockburn, the foremost tartan manufacturer of the era, first began to attribute specific setts to specific families. The two most common setts are red and green.

Clan Wallace Society

The Clan Wallace Society (CWS) represents all Scots of any Clan and others who wish they were Scots. Although mainly in North America, the Society has more than 1,800 members worldwide. The Society was founded and chartered in Texas in 1966. Wallaces reside in all corners of the globe and share common bonds of kinship and heritage, both to one another and with others of Scottish descent.

The current Chief of Clan Wallace and Honorary President is Andrew Robert Wallace of that Ilk, 36th Chief of the Clan and Name Wallace. There are several active groups of CWS in North America that represent the Society in over 75 Scottish games and festivals and meet socially.

CWS promotes the truth about Sir William Wallace, the national hero of Scotland who suffered martyrdom for his country in 1305; and teaches about Scottish heritage; and the history of the Clans and achievements of those claiming Scottish descent, are explored.

CWS does collection, restoration, and preservation for places and objects of interest to the public in general and the Family of Wallace in particular. In Sept 1970, CWS announced the completion of the monument at Elderslie and the unveiling of six bronze-colored plaques—a project that the London Renfrewshire Association had begun in 1912. CWS made donations to the maintenance of the National Wallace Monument at Stirling. Many other Scottish heritage projects have been completed with donations made through the CWS Rewards Program. The Rewards Trifold highlights many of those donations.

Activities

CWS has been instrumental in the publication, republication, and distribution of works such as Seaver's Genealogical Data, and Mitchell's Wallaces of Elderslie. The founder of CWS, the late

Charles B. Wallace's The Clan Wallace, now in its 4th Edition, is a comprehensive collection of family history and data. The Society has also placed its publications in 20 libraries nationwide and in Scotland. At present, the Society's collections and archives are housed at the Ellen Payne Odom Genealogy Library in Moultrie, GA. CWS also had the "Maitland Papers," (Documents Illustrative of Sir William Wallace - His Life and Times) translated from Norman French, Old English, Gaelic, Scots, and Latin to modern English. CWS also sponsors several Scottish Pipe and Drum bands throughout the country.
